Thou Shalt Not Love

A NOVEL BY — GEORGIA GRAIG

"I suppose it was inevitable, but—well, I got jealous. I don't help it? Yes, jealous of every man you smiled at, forgetting that I was the one who told you to smile! I tried to tell myself that I hated you for your tantalizing indifference. I tried, right from the start, to think of you the worst—the very worst. I didn't realize until I kissed you this afternoon that I love you; that I have loved you from the beginning."

There was a roaring clamor in Starr's head, a strange throbbing like the beat of jungle tom-toms in her veins, like the sound of those weird drums of the desert, made of stretched goatskins, that one heard when approaching an oasis. Uncanny, eerie, but so awfully, deliciously right with a strange delight.

Michael loved her! The Hassan of her own Arabian Nights story loved her!

She tried to realize it, and realization brought a quaking wave of feeling right from the inmost depths of her being, like nothing she had ever known before, or dreamed of. The first real thing in her life, especially in this swift merry-go-round of crazy days and nights. Michael loved her!

She did not realize it just what moment he found her hands. She only knew of a sudden that he was holding them, crushing them in a strong grip that hurt and thrilled at the same time. He was laughing; his voice was humble.

"It's not too late, is it, Starr? Say it! We'll go away from here. I have enough money. I don't think I ever want to hear of the word again—except for what it will bring to me, if you'll say just what I already have. We'll go some where where no one has ever heard of that wretched 'Play-Girl.' We'll start all over again. We'll be home of our own where everything will be different. . . . There was an ache in Starr's voice that pettified: "Starr! Say something!"

In the darkness her lips moved wordlessly. What could she say? Michael loved her!

She had brought him to this, yes, deliberately. The tantalizing indifference of which he spoke had been as far from that as it was possible to be. It had been part of a carefully-thought-out, elaborate campaign for vengeance against him and against Stephanie Dale. She was not meant to humble the proud Michael to her feet, and then she would have laughed at him! And tossed her head at the overbearing egotist Stephanie Dale with all her Peter Stuyvesant ancestry! Stoytrev!

In this moment of realization, revenge was a booming which came from his vicious pariah and landed squarely on Starr Ellison's own black head. Because she knew in this startling moment that she loved him, too, that a despairing love of him had been the reason for most of the blackest moments of the days since she had known him, that her tantalizing overhad everything else, even the upheld scythe of the Grim Reaper which was always menacing her. She loved him, and in all her for so ready to forgive, to take all blame to himself! If only that were all that lay between them—if only a thing like that, with all its implied, there was what was keeping them apart! If only she could have flung herself into his arms and cried:

"I made a mistake, Michael—Starr! A terrible mistake. But I'm ready to make it for it—for anything by giving you my whole future, by devoting it myself to the love of my full heart, to making you happy."

How bitter those words: "If only—"

Another voice suddenly cut through the darkness. A form was materializing, outlined against the lighted open windows. Lance Marlowe this time. Seeking a proloned chance. Starr had never been so glad to see Lance since the first time she had met him. She held out her hands to him, laughing.

"It's nice to see I'm not forgotten, Lance! I'm dying to dance!"

Michael said swiftly, under his breath, "I don't like this, Starr, without giving me an answer!"

She managed a stricken whisper. "I can't, Michael. Honestly—"

"Give me a few hours—say to-morrow night at Lance's party at the Regal and I'll be 'cashed.' And then she fled from him.

As the lights from the ball room struck Starr's face when she led her to the open window, Lance said to her:

"You look as if you'd been seeing ghosts out here, Starr."

"The murmurs—'I have'—and for once her painted lips were not smiling."

CHAPTER XI.

Starr was not certain she had been asleep at all when the small, round telephone at her bedside whirled her to an awakening. Sleepily she picked it up. The voice calling out of the night morning mists could know. Sturdy little men with clear gray eyes like Michael; little girls who looked like Stephanie. They must be the look like Stephanie; they must be Starr's. She was a wild, yearning dream of motherhood; she was her pitiful few months less to love.

She strained against his enveloping arms.

"Michael, let me go!"

He only laughed at the confident laugh of a conquering lover.

"Why should I let you go, when I've just found you?"

His lips were on her again—she was almost on that sea of languorous delight. . . . Why did she give him her heart? . . . Why did she give him a single moment the thrill of the rapture of love given and returned?

And she knew she wanted him to speak as he was whispering the crazy sort of things loves always whisper—she wanted his endearments, with his eyes melting into hers.

"Tonight you are the real Starr, the girl I found on the street, that I loved right from the start. She was the girl of my dreams, if I don't just like it. Starr! To me you're just like your name."

CRAWLED UPSTAIRS ON ALL FOURS

Owing to Rheumatism in Her Knees

It was not a very dignified way of going upstairs, but at least it was the best she could do, at the time. Since then, she has been taking Kruschen Salts, and now feels much better. "I had very painful gout in my big toe and only got upstairs on all fours owing to rheumatism in my knees. It is over three years ago since I commenced taking Kruschen Salts. I must say on damp days I still have a little pain, but my knees are quite better. I am over 60 years of age, but I am fully equal to taking a half teaspoonful of Salts each morning in a cup of hot water."

A Notable Compliment

George Robertson of Ottawa Selected as Judge of New York Poultry Show

A notable compliment has been paid to Canada by a United States organization. The North Eastern Poultry Producers' Company request of the services of George Robertson of Ottawa, Assistant Dominion Poultry Husbandman, Central Experiment Station, Dominion Department of Agriculture, to act as judge to select what is known as the hen of the year at their poultry show which was held in New York City on November 10 to 14, 1936. This show is one of the leading annual exhibitions of poultry in the United States and the request for a Canadian judge was regarded one of the highest possible compliments in the realm of poultry judging.

When the invitation came to act as judge at New York, Mr. Robertson replied that he was booked to act at the same time at the Ottawa Winter Fair, where for thirty years in succession he had acted as judge. However, the promoters of the New York show wired that the matter was one of tremendous importance to the poultry industry as a whole that he should make the award in the major competition of the New York Show. The management of the Ottawa Winter Fair, therefore, considered that, in view of what might be regarded as a distinct compliment to Canada, he should go to New York; and for the first time in 30 years George Robertson did not judge at Ottawa.

It was only recently that another high honor was paid Mr. Robertson when he was elected to the American Poultry Judges' Association, held at Topeka, Kansas, in September, 1936, he was elected president of the association. This is the first time since 1873 when the association was organized that a Canadian has been elected president. Mr. Robertson was further honoured by being elected to the very responsible position of chair of the Standards Revision Committee of the American Poultry Association. For several years he has been a judge at the leading poultry shows in Canada and the United States.

Mrs. C. A. Williamson was delightfully surprised on her birthday, November 30th, when a number of friends gathered at her home to wish her "Many Happy Returns." She was the recipient of many dainty and useful gifts for which she expressed her thanks in a very charming manner.

The Ladies' Social Credit Group spent a very pleasant afternoon in the United church on Tuesday, Dec. 1st, after the business was completed the time was spent in games and exchange of gifts, a very nice lunch was served by Mrs. U. G. Anderson, Mrs. Purcell and Mrs. C. Ashmore.

By mistake the ladies named on the Executive Committee were omitted in the list of officers elected, they are Mrs. Purcell, Mrs. T. Ashmore and Mrs. Bomer.

The World of Wheat

By H. G. L. Strang, Director, Research Department, Seattle Grain Company, Ltd.

China is the largest wheat producer in the world. Of the 5,000 million bushels of wheat produced and consumed on the average each year in the world, the Chinese production and consumption is about 500 million.

The U. S. S. R. (Russia) follows, a close second, with almost the same amount, but it is expected that in a few years the wheat grown in the U. S. S. R. will exceed the Chinese production. The population of the U. S. S. R. is increasing at such a rate that it seems almost certain that the people there will require for their own consumption every bushel on the average that the U. S. S. R. can raise.

(Russia tells us that she does not produce wheat for export, in competition with Canada, and will only sell wheat abroad when she has a much larger crop than usual).

Third comes the United States with a production in normal years of about 800 million bushels. Fourth comes Canada with an average of 385 million. Next India with 330 million, then France with 280 million, Argentina with 235 million, Italy with 225 million, Spain 145 million, then a number of countries each of which produces quantities varying from 100 million down to 5 million.

Following worldwide factors have recently tended to raise prices: Lack of moisture in U. S. A., Southwest continues—France and Italy buying generously—Seedling in Europe delayed by rains—Seattle report confirms lack seed moisture Canadian West—South African wheat crop less than last year—Reports of drought in North China—China harvests large cotton crop.

Following factors have tended to lower prices: Improvement in crop conditions in Argentina and Australia—Japan harvests 490 million bushels rice which is 50 million larger than last year—European buyers decrease—Hardness when price advances—Large shipments of corn and rye flowing to markets—Turkey sells large quantities barley.

A part of a car load of vegetables and fruit was distributed in the district on Friday and Saturday to needy ones. Rev. Dawson was in charge of the distribution. It was through his efforts along with Rev. H. L. Morrison of the Community church, Kempenfelt, Ontario and the congregation together with the Canadian Pacific Railway who contributed largely by way of the freight charges that amounted to about $400.00, that this fruit and vegetables were made available; and thanks are extended to the good folks of Ontario who made the arrangements and to the C. P. R.

Xmas cake ingredients, all new and fresh stock, why not have the best cake you ever made, these extra quality nuts, fruits, spices and etc. cost no more at Campbell's.

Mr. and Mrs. James Matson of Lomond were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Dave Watkins over the week end.
